
Each point is one national poll, with a 95 percent interval based on the number of respondents asked the item; these assume simple random sampling and so are slightly narrower than the intervals the pollsters publish. Dashed lines are the unweighted average across the 5 polls. Wording differs: CNN asks whether shutting down agencies such as USAID and the CFPB is a good or bad thing, and the Washington Post describes the agency rather than naming it. A sixth 2025 poll, KFF's February Health Tracking Poll, measured awareness only and is not plotted.
Source: Roper iPoll, studies #31122394, #31122387, #31122388, #31122408 and #31122581.